Livingston challenges McCloud for mayor — Ken White and Jim Wright enter council race

By TAMARA GRIPPI

A LAST-MINUTE announcement at city hall abruptly shifted the political landscape in Carmel Thursday, as city council member Barbara Livingston announced she would challenge Sue McCloud for mayor in the April 9 city election. She was joined by former Mayor Ken White and a former councilman, Jim Wright, who said they would run for city council at Livingston's side.

With a crowd of approximately 70 supporters awaiting them, Livingston, White and Wright sailed onto Monte Verde Street in a red Thunderbird convertible decorated with American flags.

"What a thrill," said Livingston after stepping out of the car to address the crowd. "This is very emotional. I was hoping the media and supporters would show up and by God you did."

Livingston, who has served on the city council for a decade, said her "years of experience and dedication to the community have long pointed me in this direction."

"The three of us are running because we're concerned about the change in philosophy in the village in the last two years," she said.

All three candidates spoke out about the importance of offering voters a choice in the election and emphasized residents' needs as a top priority.

"No one in this world-class city of Carmel should run unopposed," said White. "I've experienced it and I didn't learn a darn thing." The former mayor was elected with no opposition in 1994 and 1998. McCloud defeated White in the 2000 election.

Until this week, no one had stepped forward to challenge McCloud and council incumbents Paula Hazdovac and Gerard Rose, who are all up for reelection.

"This election will determine once and for all if we're getting serious about residents' concerns — about taking care of our residents," White said.

Wright, who was elected to the city council in 1984 and 1988, said he was delighted to be on the same team as Livingston and White. "We are in tune with the broad political issues," Wright said.

"We want to maintain Carmel as a special place to live," he said. "We want to restore open government and welcome the participation of all."

After addressing the crowd, Livingston, White and Wright invited their supporters to join them inside city hall to make their candidacies official. The candidates filled out

AND YOU THOUGHT YOUR CAR HAD MILES ON IT

By MARY BROWNFIELD

WHILE THE lifespan of a bus is considered to be 12 years or 500,000 miles, Monterey-Salinas Transit owns 38 buses lumbering along with a million miles on their odometers after more than 15 years on the road, according to assistant general manager Carl Sedoryk.

So MST staff will ask the board of directors Jan. 14 to consider spending $19 million on 46 new buses. The contract would replace those 38 and include eight more for expanded long-distance service to Watsonville, Gilroy and South Monterey County.

Although it normally takes as much as three years to develop the technical specifications for a new bus, submit required federal and state paperwork, purchase the new coach and take delivery, MST's proposal could put 16 brand new buses on the streets by November because the agency can join an order from the Central Contra Costa Transit Authority, according to Sedoryk.

"We're able to significantly streamline the whole process," he said. "The specs are already designed; the documents are already approved."

In the past, transit agencies were required to undertake the ordering process independently, but new federal guidelines allow them to work in tandem with others which ultimately saves time and taxpayers' money, according to Sedoryk.

If the board directs staff to move ahead, MST will negotiate terms for the $19 million purchase and financing, which it hopes to pay off over 10 years.

The new buses — cheaper to run and varying in size so smaller coaches can be used on less populous routes — should help pay for themselves through the money they save on fuel consumption and maintenance, Sedoryk said.

"The problem MST has had in the past is that it's unable to generate sufficient funds from local, state and federal sources to replace the vehicles on a timely basis," he said.

The mileage on this odometer is not an anomaly. In fact, its bus is one of the youngsters in a fleet of 38, many of which have logged considerably more than a million miles on local roads. Monterey-Salinas Transit wants to replace them with 46 new buses at a cost of $19 million.

"What we want to accomplish with this procurement is to replace all those vehicles that are for all intents and purposes obsolete."

The MST board of directors will discuss the proposal at its regular meeting Jan. 14 at 10 a.m. in the MST Conference Room, 1 Ryan Ranch Rd., Monterey. For more information, call 899-2558 or visit www.mst.org.

Police nab suspects in porta-potty fire

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A BIT of late-night and possibly alcohol-induced mischief led to the fire that destroyed two porta potties on Scenic Road last November, according to Carmel Police Detective Sgt. Terry Chandler.

After conducting interviews at Carmel High School Jan. 7, Chandler cited two male Carmel High School juniors, aged 16 and 17, for unlawfully setting a fire, a misdemeanor. "I talked to them both today, and they gave it up," he said.

"Apparently there were seven of them to start with. They'd been out that night, purchased alcohol illegally and wound up at the beach. A couple of kids went into the restrooms and started lighting the toilet paper on fire," Chandler said. "I don't think they had any intention of setting the restrooms on fire."

More likely, the paper smoldered for hours before igniting the blaze that incinerated the restrooms in the wee hours of Nov. 18, "and when the kids went to the beach the next day, they saw them burned to the ground."

An anonymous tip led police to the suspects, whose names aren't being released. Through interviews with several students and parents, Chandler said he obtained the names of teens who had been at the beach the night of the fire and was ultimately able to identify the two students who ignited the toilet paper.

Now that the boys have been cited, they will end up in juvenile court. Chandler said any sentence will like-

P.G. Museum investigates methods of reproducing historical photos

By TAMARA GRIPPI

ONE OF the hidden treasures of Pacific Grove's Museum of Natural History — a collection of 589 glass-plate negatives capturing city life at the turn of the 20th Century — may finally become accessible to the public.

Museum director Stephen Bailey and his staff are considering a proposal to scan the negatives — taken 100 years ago by Pacific Grove photographer and pharmacist Charles Tuttle — and make the images available on the Internet.

However that strategy has drawn criticism from Esther Trosow, an archivist and former employee of the museum who believes the only way to do justice to the Tuttle Collection is to print the images on paper.

"[Scanning] is a great solution for access, but it's not a great solution for preservation," Trosow said. "They've had those plates in the basement for 20 years and I've been lobbying them for four years to do something."

But Bailey said the option of digitally scanning the images — which is still being investigated — won't preclude the museum's ability to print the photographs in the future because the originals will be retained and preserved just as they have been for years.

"For maximum public access in a relatively short period of time, digital scanning and availability on the Internet is far better than just about anything you could do," Bailey said.

Trosow claimed the level of resolution afforded by the scanned images may not be close to what could be available if the negatives were printed on archival quality paper.

"When you look at old photos, sometimes the great source of information is a very small portion — a license plate number, the title of a movie," Trosow said. "You need that capacity. You need to be able to blow up a small section, but when you digitize you may lose that capacity," depending on the resolution of the scan.

And she said time may be running out to print the old plates. "They are the kind of slides you can't put in a new enlarger," she said. "As days go on there may be fewer people around who can offer a paper print."

Recent history

Four years ago, Trosow was one of several archivists who submitted bids to print the Tuttle collection for the city. Trosow provided the lowest price, but the city ultimately decided against awarding to bid to her or anybody else.

At the time, Pacific Grove's city attorney put the kibosh on awarding the bid to Trosow because her proposal — which included the use of historian Pat Hathaway's equipment — stipulated that Hathaway would receive copies of each print.

Hathaway had given all 589 glass plate negatives to the city 20 years ago and had only printed a small portion of them. Hathaway still owns the remainder of the Tuttle images outside of Pacific Grove.

In early 2001, the Pacific Grove City Council took up the issue of the Tuttle Collection again. At that time the council decided it was time to conduct an inventory of the entire holdings of the city.

"The council said the Tuttle Collection was a small piece of a big problem — the city holds many historical items," Bailey said.

Bailey and his staff have spent the last year carrying out that survey and now they're beginning "to crunch numbers," he said. The museum has only so much money to look after all its collections and Bailey believes the cost to print the Tuttle Collection would be at least $15,000.

Trosow believes printing the negatives is the best way to double the chances the images will endure. "The thing is, if the plates got wet or something the image would slip right off the glass," she said. "If it's on paper it's a lot easier to do disaster recovery."

But Bailey is confident all precautions have been taken to ensure the images are safe.

"Each plate is stored in an individual, acid-free sleeve," he said. In addition, the basement has a drainage system designed to prevent groundwater flooding.

COUNCIL STAYS NEUTRAL OVER PENDING WATER TRANSFER BAN

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE CARMEL City Council won't take a stance on the proposed ban on water credit transfers, which will go before the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District Jan. 31.

Voting 3-2, with council members Paula Hazdovac and Gerard Rose dissenting, the council rejected a letter drafted by Carmel planning staff that would have opposed the outright ban on commercial water transfers.

The Monterey County Mayor's Association had asked Carmel to weigh in on the issue.

Councilman Dick Ely, a former water district director, told the council the long-term consequences of allowing water transfers outweigh the short-term benefits.

When he was on the board, Ely opposed water transfers because "the system was being grossly abused" and there was no way to determine if they resulted in a reduction of water use.

In his report to the city council, acting planning director Chip Rerig explained that recent changes approved by the water board last November included new provisions for monitoring water use, publicly disclosing them and requiring a 50 percent "conservation reduction" for each transfer.

However, those changes were revoked by the water board in December after the election changed the political make-up of the board.

Now instead of further regulating water transfers, the new board is poised to ban them altogether Jan. 31.

"It's frustrating to see this at the eleventh hour," said Hazdovac, who represents Carmel on the technical and policy advisory committees of the water district.

Hazdovac said those committees were nearly unanimous in supporting the new regulations approved by the water board before the election.

Commercial water transfers have provided a viable way for communities like Carmel to redevelop their commercial districts, Rerig said. "It was used most recently on the redevelopment of the Cypress Inn" — a project that resulted in the addition of affordable housing and the historic designation of two buildings.

But Linda Anderson said it was time to put a stop to a practice that allows water to be sold to the highest bidder. "I think it's really important to put a lid on what's going on — maybe not in Carmel, but what's going on in the county," Anderson said. "You have to think regionally."

Ely said the community needs to get serious about a long-term water solution before it's too late.

"There is no question in my mind that what this community will be eventually faced with is seawater intrusion," Ely said. "Until something is done by the community at large to solve the long-term problem, that date is becoming ever and ever closer."

Coastal commission to see Carmel house first hand before ruling on demolition

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE CALIFORNIA Coastal Commission held off on deciding whether to allow the demolition of a 61-year-old Torres Street house until the commission can actually see it — an idea suggested by commissioner Dave Potter at the group's Jan. 9 meeting.

Just before his fellow commissioners were about to vote on a motion to deny the demolition, Potter asked them to put the decision off until their March meeting in Monterey — so they can see for themselves if the tear-down threatens the character of the neighborhood.

"This issue is about how in keeping with character [the house] is," Potter said. "I would be more comfortable to take time to actually look at it before we flat out deny the man."

Owners William and Nancy Callahan want to build a modern eclectic house to replace the older structure.

Some commissioners charged that the new house — 524 square feet larger than the existing home — was out of whack with the community character of Carmel because of its size and second story.

Others argued the commission didn't really know what the community character was like in Callahan's own neighborhood and therefore didn't have a basis to deny his project.

Potter noted that he's taken the time to personally inspect every other demolition request that has come to the commission from the Carmel area and apologized that he hadn't yet had the chance to visit Callahan's house.

Commissioner Dave Allgood agreed that the visuals provided by staff showing Callahan's existing house and the two homes on either side didn't provide convincing proof of community character.

Torrance with trees

"I've read the report and seen the presentation and looked at the schematics and I'll be damned if I see any Carmel character here," Allgood said. "This could be Torrance with trees or any other place in the world. Based on this it's hard for me to say that this is busting the character of Carmel."

The coastal commission's district manager, Charles Lester, advised the commission to reject the request for demolition of the "modest board and batten house," which "will almost certainly lead to a change in character at this site" and could contribute to overall changes in Carmel's character.

Lester noted that the the one-story, 988-square-foot house and 288-square-foot garage would be replaced by a two-story, 1800-square-foot house.

While the City of Carmel has submitted its Local Coastal Program — which will ultimately give Carmel the final say over demolitions — to the coastal commission, it may be several months before coastal staff completes its review of the document and recommends changes. Several more months will likely pass before the city and the commission can agree upon the LCP so it can be certified.

Coastal commission executive director Peter Douglas told the commission that staff was simply following through on the commission's wishes — to closely watch the demolitions of Carmel homes until the city's LCP is adopted.

"Over the years it became clear to the commission that the city wasn't addressing the issue of community character, so you gave us direction to look closely at demolitions on a case-by-case basis," Douglas said. "That's what we're doing here."

Some commissioners agreed with staff that the plans for the new home were out of scale with Carmel.

"This is a far cry from being a minor increase," said commissioner Amanda Susskind. "Staff has substantial evidence that this would not be consistent with the community character.

Rigorous Standards

"We set out fairly rigorous standards for staff to evaluate (demolitions)," said Commissioner Mike Reilly. "I think the staff recommendation is consistent with our previous direction."

But Commissioner Cynthia McClain-Hill wondered how the commission could assess community character of the area by simply examining the house slated for demolition.

"We've got pictures from the applicant indicating that there are houses pretty close to his house that are substantial," McClain-Hill said. "It's hard for me to make findings with respect to community character if the only comparison is with the house to be demolished as opposed to the neighborhood where it sits."

Callahan appealed to the commission to allow the demolition. "The place is single-wall construction," he said. "You can sit in the living room and at night and see cars drive by through the slats. It's not a good structure."

After the meeting, Callahan told The Pine Cone he was pleased the commission had decided to look at his home before making a decision.

Another request for a Carmel demolition, which was supposed to be heard by the commission that day, was withdrawn by the applicant after reading the staff report recommending denial.

P.G. homeowners win court fight over water transfers

By PAUL MILLER

A GROUP of 14 Pacific Grove homeowners can keep the water they bought in a city-approved transfer deal, thanks to a decision this week by a Monterey County judge.

In a suit brought by attorney and political activist Susan Goldbeck, two P.G. residents claimed that the water transfers were illegal. But Judge Susan Dauphiné disagreed. The evidence presented by Goldbeck "is insufficient . . . to invalidate the water credit transfers," Dauphiné ruled Jan. 9.

The transfer deal, which benefited 14 property owners whose building projects were thwarted by the Peninsula's long-term water shortage, was brokered by Pacific Grove architect Eric Miller.

"This decision is a great relief," said Miller. He bought enough water to build a home for his family on Asilomar Avenue — a home that is well on its way to completion, but which might have had its water taken away by the judge.

"We're local people just trying to find a place to live," Miller told The Pine Cone. He said the lawsuit took a heavy emotional toll on everyone involved. "And I had to put the attorneys' fees on my mortgage."

The water acquired by Miller and the other homeowners came from an old laundry which has been converted by the Finklang family into a retail store called Grove Homescapes. Under water district rules, the laundry's extra water was available for transfer to other Pacific Grove businesses — or to the city, which could then transfer the water to individual properties. In December 2000, the Pacific Grove City Council approved the deal.

The Finklangs got more than $140,000 for the water they sold; the city got $29,000 worth — an allocation of almost 100,000 gallons — for free. The rest went to the 14 families who paid the bill.

Miller said the fact that the city got a healthy share of the water makes it ridiculous to call the transfer "profiteering" or "catering to the rich" — accusations which have been leveled at the transfer deal.

"Also, everyone who was on the city's waiting list had a chance to participate," Miller said. "It certainly isn't fair to be told there's no water, so I tried to think creatively to find some for my family."

The judge's ruling doesn't do much for hundreds of other Peninsula property owners who are waiting for a water allocation. Next week, the water district board of directors took the first steps toward barring any new water transfers. Judge Dauphiné's ruling has no effect on that decision, which came after Judi Lehman defeated Ron Chesshire in the November election.

The Pebble Beach Company has offered some of its unused water to the district for allocation to properties on the waiting list. The offer, which would generate money to pay for improvements to the water reclamation system at the Carmel sewage treatment plant, has not been acted on by the water management district. There is no other plan afoot to provide any new water to Peninsula residents in the foreseeable future.

Act of God or not, Carmel residents want PG&E to pay

By MARY BROWNFIELD

MELTED MICROWAVES, blown ovens, broken hot water heaters and fried fax machines, computers, printers, TVs, VCRs and stereos greeted dozens of Carmel Views residents after a Dec. 21 power surge, and many are seeking restitution from PG&E.

"None of us have our houses back together," said resident Mary Jo Trivers, who went without a microwave and her double oven during the busy Christmas holiday.

The damage could range from hundreds to thousands of dollars, according to resident Bob Sinotte. He lost a $3,000 computer that contained all his business files and two TVs.

"Some of the appliances can be repaired by replacing a fuse, but others are completely fried. It's the inconvenience, too, that's really annoying."

Calls to PG&E for an explanation went unreturned, Trivers said, so the homeowners group, the Carmel Views Association decided to increase their muscle with a united front.

"The association can apply pressure if individuals are not compensated for their losses," said Sinotte, the CVA's president.

The surge hit about 60 homes in Carmel Views and several more in the Aguajito area when a PG&E transformer on Cañada Court blew and a 60,000-volt line leading to Big Sur fell onto the 20,000-vote line that feeds Carmel Views, according to Sinotte.

PG&E has deemed it an act of God — insurance parlance for weather-related incidents in this case — and denied the claims, according to PG&E spokesman Jeff Smith.

"Conditions beyond the company's control caused the problem."

The surge is the third to occur in the neighborhood at the mouth of the Valley in the past several years, according to Sinotte, though the other surges happened when power was restored, not by one line hitting another.

Sinotte heard from an electrical contractor that it's unusual for a high-voltage line to be above a low-voltage line. Not so, according to Smith, who said the entire power line system is organized that way. Regardless, that issue is irrelevant in a weather-related accident, Smith added.

But Sinotte said the power company should be willing to pay either way.

"The surge could have been avoided if the lines were separated enough."

Since the first step involves filing claims with PG&E, Sinotte has been busy handing out the required paperwork to residents. The next move will be decided during their annual meeting Jan. 28, and Sinotte hopes to have a PG&E customer-service person there to answer questions.

If PG&E fails to pay, the consumers can take their complaints to the California Public Utilities Commission.

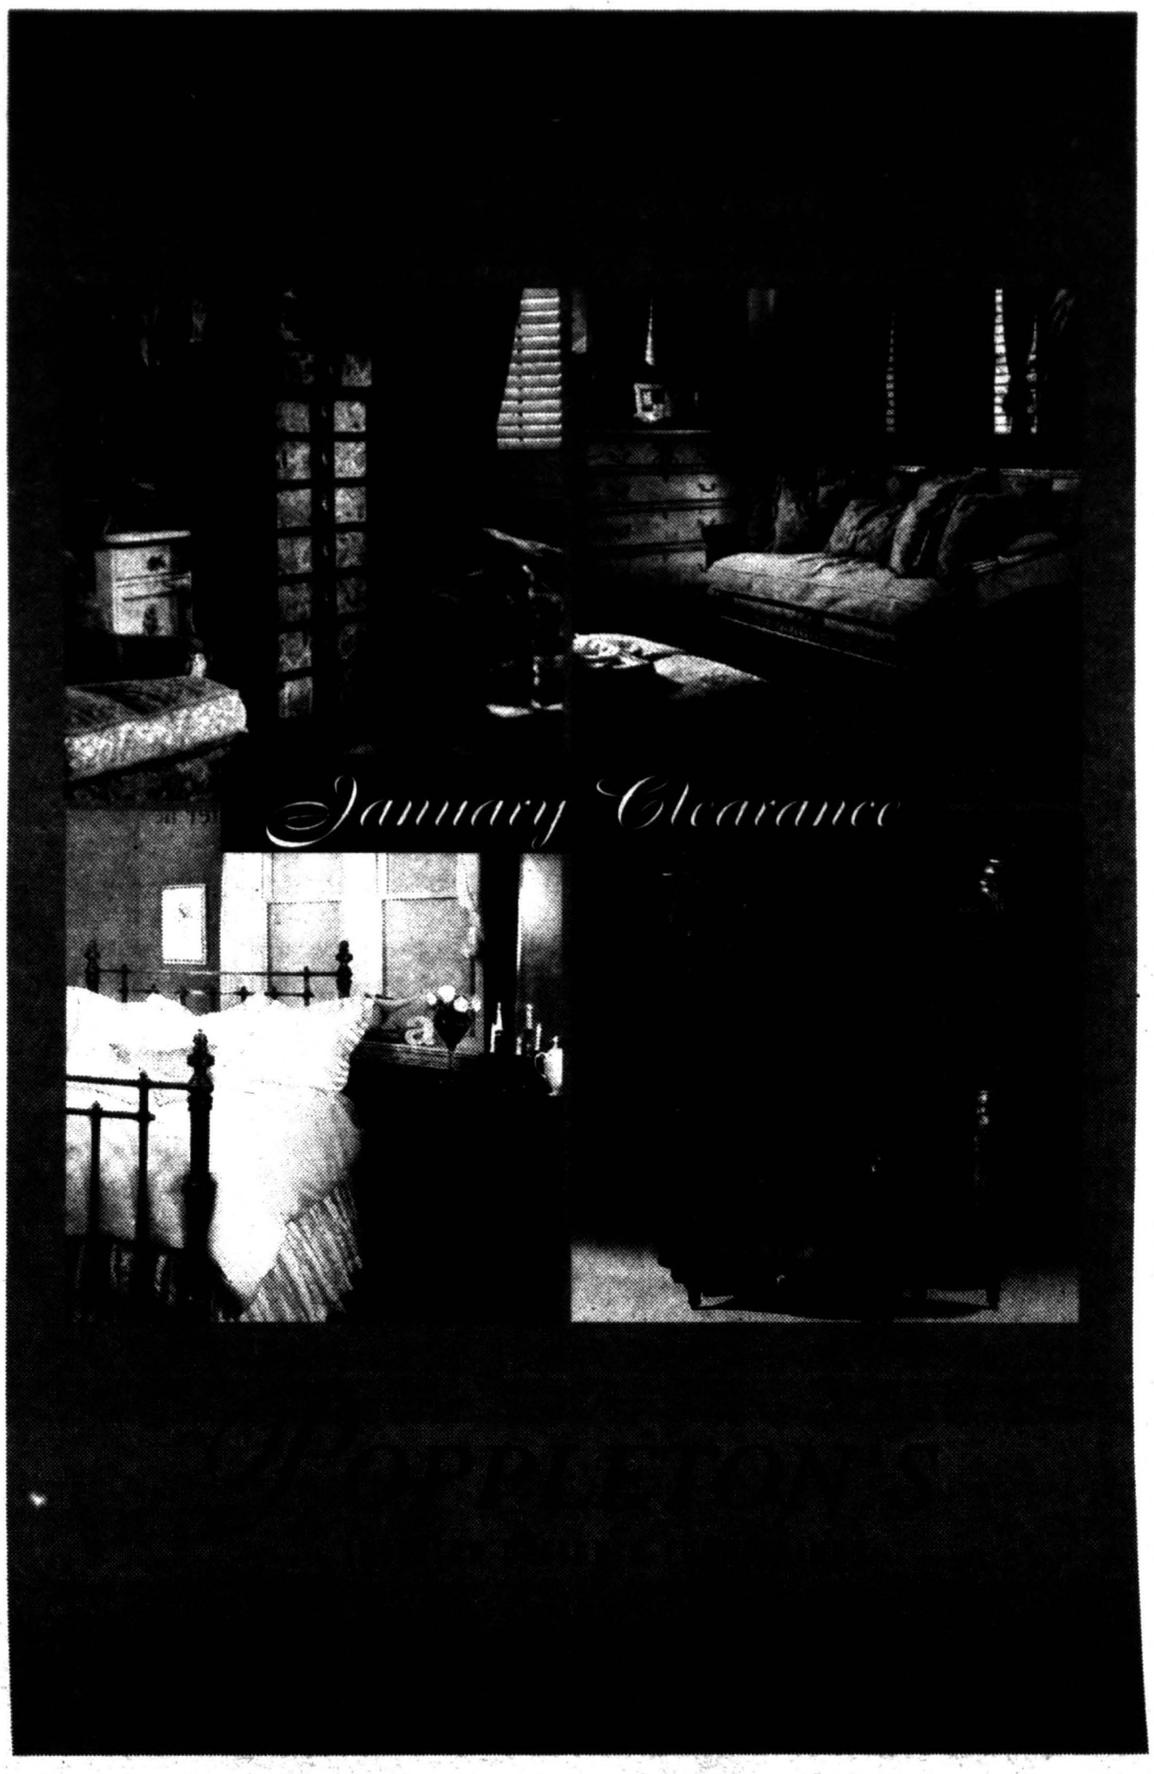
Chandler applauded the anonymous tipster for coming forth with information that aided the detective in solving the case.

"If (the tipster) hadn't come forward, we wouldn't have gotten on any trail at all."

Carmelite Clayton Anderson, speaking for the Carmel Beach Users group that last month offered a $1,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of those involved, said he was happy to hear suspects had been cited.

"We will work through the police to bestow the reward," he said. "We're very pleased that the vandals have been found."



ALBERTO BONNET

Alberto Bonnet AKA Al Hood was born on Thanksgiving Day, November 30, 1926 in Wykoff, NJ, and died December 15, 2001. A resident of Carmel, CA, he died at the Hospice House in Monterey, CA.

An elegant and familiar figure accompanying his friend and companion of eighteen years, Marjorie Wurzmann, on the round trip from Lincoln and 11th to the Post office, he will be greatly missed by his many friends and family.

His career began in New Jersey, where he distributed fuel oil and, in addition, had a notable collection of antique cars which were used by television studios for period productions.

Upon arrival in Carmel, he operated the Shell station on San Carlos Street for many years. Following a dream, Al moved to Carmel Valley Village where he initiated the purchase of the Carmel Valley Airfield. He purchased the only surviving hangar house and, because he was a licensed pilot, opened a charter service, flying people in and out of the Valley for business and pleasure.

Because of Village resistance, he returned to Carmel and opened a shop in the Doud Arcade where he meticulously crafted elegant metal sculptures of fishing boats, cypress trees, and, occasionally, small antique cars.

In addition to Marjorie and her daughter, Renee Fargeon, he leaves his first wife, Connie Breien, two children, Al Hood, Jr., Connie Jean Miller, and his youngest son, Darien Bonnet. Also surviving are two sisters, Edith Hunt and Florence Hendricks. At Mr. Bonnet's request, no services will be held.

Carmel Valley

California's newest city: Goletas' tale of incorporation

By MARY BROWNFIELD

AFTER ALMOST 50 years of failed campaigns and numerous ballot measures, the residents of Goleta, in Santa Barbara County, voted last November to incorporate. As Carmel Valley residents continue debating whether to declare their scenic valley a city, Goleta's newly elected council and mayor will take office Feb. 1, the date Goleta officially becomes California's newest municipality.

Creating the 30,000-resident, 7.92-square-mile city came at a high cost, with voters agreeing to permanently fork over 50 percent of their property taxes and 30 percent of their sales taxes to the county in exchange for "ongoing county-wide services," according to incorporation proponent Michael Bennett.

They will also pay the county for many functions typically under the purview of government: law enforcement, fire protection, public works and other services, and will continue to be served by two sanitation districts and the Goleta Water District.

In addition, the new city will transfer 20 percent of its sales tax revenues and 40 percent of its transient occupancy tax revenues for 10 years to compensate the county for the tax money it will lose now that Goleta has incorporated.

Bennett could not estimate how much money that would mean, but said, "It's substantial and very painful — it's unconscionable, to be quite frank."

Land use was the major issue that drove 58 percent of the 15,000 registered voters within the proposed city of Goleta to support incorporation despite the costs, according to Bennett. "All the building taking place in South County was occurring in Goleta, so in order to control growth we entered into a water moratorium back in '72."

Bennett, a battalion chief with the Santa Barbara County Fire Department, had lived in the area just two years at that point. Twenty years later, in the midst of a severe drought, Santa Barbara County residents voted to join the state water system and the moratorium ended.

"So suddenly all these projects that had been proposed in Goleta Valley for years and years and years went forward," he said. "People saw this huge construction boom take place and they went berserk."

A group formed in 1998 to push for incorporation, commissioned the fiscal studies which indicated cityhood was feasible and obtained enough signatures to get a proposal on the ballot.

Support came from those fed up with the "pave-anything-you-see North County attitude" on the county board of supervisors that led to the development of 1,500 new housing units and 2,000,000 square feet of commercial space in the area in just four years, according to Bennett.

"We were in the right place at the right time in 1999, when people had just about had it," Bennett said. "That's where the success came from."

A long debate

The first rumblings about becoming a city began in 1958, according to Bennett, after the city of Santa Barbara annexed the Santa Barbara Airport property which sits "smack-dab in the middle of Goleta."

"This really stuck in the craw of those old farmers and ranchers," he said. "There were about 2,500 people who lived here, and they didn't like what they saw happening."

That initial drive never gained momentum, according to Bennett, and proponents undertook several subsequent campaigns for cityhood in the decades that followed.

Those never made it to the ballot, and the city of Santa Barbara contemplated annexing Goleta several times but didn't pursue it because of the costs. One annexation vote held in 1975 failed.

The first incorporation measure made it onto the ballot in 1987, but that vote, as well as two that followed in 1990 and 1993, failed to gain majority support. The third proposal included candidates for city council and mayor.

"I was elected mayor in 1993 but the incorporation measure failed, so I was a mayor without a city," Bennett said. "I had a lot of fun with that."

The cons

In all the campaigning, including the most recent effort, the arguments against incorporation focused on the cost of self-government and the potential for more government meddling, according to Bennett — similar to those heard in discussions about the incorporation of Carmel Valley.

Some questions have been easier to answer, such as whether mailing addresses will have to change to show the name of the new city. Postal officials assured the residents that they could still use "Santa Barbara" in their addresses so long as they had the proper ZIP code, according to Bennett.

Opponents also questioned the cost of cityhood, particularly the revenue neutrality payments the new city would have to make to the county.

But feasibility studies conducted even before a new shopping center and luxury hotel were built in Goleta indicated the city could collect enough tax money to survive, according to Bennett.

To cover the costs of running a city, critics said its residents would have to pay more taxes.

"The naysayers always say it will raise taxes," Bennett said. "But there's no way anyone's going to raise taxes without a vote of the people."

Opponents also said becoming a city would just add another layer of government, Bennett said. "But I think we were successful in saying it was replacing government, it's not in fact another layer. County government has a role to play, as does municipal government — that's why there are 477 cities that have incorporated in the state of California."

Drivers to see orange vests, big trucks, cones and barriers on Carmel Valley Road for seven months

By MARY BROWNFIELD

HEAVY EQUIPMENT parked by the side of Carmel Valley Road earlier this month got moving Jan. 7 as crews began widening parts of the road to install turn lanes and merge lanes between Cañada Way and Mid-Valley Shopping Center.

The Cañada Way improvements will be completed first, followed by work in the areas of All Saints' Day School and Carmelo School, and between Via del Cinco Road and Dorris Drive, according to the Monterey County Public Works Department.

"Essentially the work involves widening and restriping at various intersections, so the contractor will be setting up from time to time at different locations," said deputy public works director Nick Nichols. "They will be setting up barricades and flagging, and there may be some traffic congestion associated with the construction."

Drivers should expect temporarily reduced speed limits and narrower lane widths in the areas while work is done. But the contractor is not allowed to close lanes during peak traffic hours before 9 a.m. or after 4 p.m. "to try to make sure they're not creating congestion during the heaviest commute hours," Nichols said, and they will work Monday through Friday during daylight hours only.

The $1,370,062 project should be finished by July 15, and is being funded by developer fees paid to the Carmel Valley Road Traffic Impact Mitigation Fee Fund and by a transportation grant.

"We have to ask the community for forbearance," Nichols said. "We are trying to make the road safer for them by putting in turn pockets, and it will take a while to get them all done."

Also in progress is the installation of a traffic signal at Via Mallorca and Carmel Valley Road, which is scheduled to be operating in about a month.

New year greets new planning commissioners, design review board

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THE TIMING couldn't be better.

Two new Carmel Planning Commission members took the oath of office Jan. 9 — the first planning commission meeting of the year and just after that body finished numerous meetings on the mammoth Local Coastal Program.

Alan Hewer and Julie Culver joined veteran commissioners Robin Wilson, Pope Coleman and Frank Wasko on the dais. They replace former commissioners Bill Strid and Bart Bartron, who now serve on the city's new design review board.

Julie Culver

Alan Hewer

Hewer, a retired San Antonio Avenue resident with bachelor's and master's degrees in mathematics from Cambridge University in England, has had ample experience working through Carmel's planning process: He's remodeled several homes, often acting as contractor and developer.

"Having worked with the Carmel planning organization on three home remodels, I would like to offer my services to improve the efficiency of the process," he wrote in his application to the city. As a longtime Carmel resident, Hewer said he's also interested in preserving the city's character.

Before retiring in 2000, Hewer worked for seven years as director of software development for Symbol Technologies, Inc. Before that, he directed development efforts at two other companies. He also taught computer classes at the Carmel Foundation.

Attorney Julie Culver, who lives on Camino Real, worked as a deputy district attorney for Monterey County for 14 years before taking on the role of general counsel for Connect Technology PLC in Santa Clara.

"As an interested and involved citizen of Carmel, I have a legal, business and community-based background which could contribute to the direction of Carmel," she wrote.

Culver also co-owned and operated a cattle and farming operation in Bradley for seven years. She obtained her bachelor's Don't Lose Your Life Savings Paying Nursing Home Costs!

Most People Can Qualify for State Benefits!

John and Mary led a good and happy life. They were married when John returned from Europe after World War II. They worked hard to buy a home, raise their children and save enough money to have a comfortable retirement. They were proud to have achieved the "American Dream".

MICHELLE ASHEN
Certified Estate Planner

Soon after retirement, John started to change. His doctor diagnosed him with senile dementia. After two difficult and strenuous years of caring for her husband, Mary's doctors advised her that she should no longer care for John at home and that he needed to be placed in a nursing home. Mary was able to place John in a nursing home nearby at a cost of nearly $3,500 per month. Not only was Mary devastated that her husband needed nursing home care, but she feared that all her assets, including her home and life savings, would soon be gone due to the cost of nursing home care.

Mary was also surprised to learn that neither Medicare nor their supplemental insurance would cover long-term nursing home care. Long-term care insurance could have helped had they purchased it when they were healthy, but like most retiree's they could not afford the premiums.

Mary's only option, other than impoverishment, is to access Medi-Cal. Medi-Cal is a federal and state program that can pay a share of nursing home costs for those who meet the eligibility requirements. With proper planning, Mary could qualify for some level of benefits. Sound and appropriate Medi-Cal planning can ensure that senior citizens like John will receive quality health care in an affordable manner with out being forced to deplete all their assets and becoming impoverished.

The benefits paid by Medi-Cal will depend on what type of assets you own, your income, marital status, and the cost of care in your area. Current law allows you to rearrange your assets in order to receive benefits. Planning prior to application can save thousands of dollars. Please note that transferring assets to anyone other than your spouse could cause you to be disqualified from benefits for a period of time. Also transferring assets to a Revocable Living Trust will not protect your assets. Common misconceptions regarding Medi-Cal are:

- You must "spend-down" to poverty level.
- There is a limit on how much you can own and still qualify for benefits.
- The state will "take" everything you own.
- The state will put a lien on your home.
- It is illegal to intentionally qualify for Medi-Cal.
- All of these statements are untrue.

The bottom line is that, whether married or single, help is available to those who seek it, but it is not automatic and you must properly arrange your assets prior to application. Advice in the form of "Medi-Cal planning" will aid you in navigating the maze of rules and stringent requirements.

A petite assortment of imported cheese with focaccia crostini will follow, and then dessert will be served: A Mandarin mousse Charlotte with a macédoine of lychees drizzled with passion fruit, accompanied by petits fours.

Talbott wines to be previewed with the dinner include Logan Chardonnay, 1999; Cuvée Cynthia '99; Logan Pinot Noir, '98; and Case Pinot Noir '97.

Cost of the dinner is $95, inclusive of tax and gratuity. For reservations, call 620-8886.

Winemaker Peter Stern oversees innovated vinification of kosher wines

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

LATE HARVEST Zinfandel from 60-year-old vines and Syrah have been added to Cabernet Sauvignon, Chardonnay and Sauvignon Blanc as newcomers to Baron Herzog brands from Royal Wine Corporation, according to winemaker Peter Stern.

These kosher wines, used as an integral part of Jewish culture for Friday night Shabbat service and important holidays, are vinified under the direction of Stern, who trains and supervises the Jewish winemaking team who do the hands-on work. Stern said he is not Jewish.

Before joining Baron Herzog in 1985, Stern was winemaker for mainstream wineries such as Mondavi and Gallo. He first worked with kosher wines as a consultant for Israel's Golan Heights winery where the quality of the wines improved so dramatically, Stern was hired to direct the winemaking team at Baron Herzog, near Santa Maria.

The parent Royal Wine Corporation was the first kosher wine company to become totally committed to making fine wines. It pays top prices for the best quality fruit and has long-term contracts with top vineyards from Napa Valley, Paraiso Springs, Paso Robles, Alexander Valley and Russian River.

Other kosher producers around the world are starting to follow Baron Herzog's lead, using the most advanced enological practices available.

As proof of Stern's success in the kosher vinification of wine grapes, some of Baron Herzog wines have earned scores above 90 in the Wine Spectator, winning dozens of gold medals in competitions against non-kosher wines. In fact, 30 percent of Baron Herzog's sales are outside the observant Jewish wine consumer category.

Carmel TomatoFest reports $48,647 donation

GARY IBSEN, founder and director of the annual Carmel TomatoFest, announced distribution of $48,647 in cash and in-kind profits to local charities from the 2001 event held at Quail Lodge Resort on Sept. 16. This brings the past three years' contribution to more than $100,000.

Proceeds from the 2001 Carmel TomatoFest were distributed to the following charities:

$29,144 — Carmel Valley Community Youth Center

$3,000 — Community Foundation for Monterey County (Youth Fund)

$11,028 — American Red Cross, Disaster Relief for New York City and Washington, D.C

$4,775 — Monterey County Food Bank

$500 — Ripplewood, Carmel Valley Village

$200 — "Jazzmasters Workshop" for teens

"This year's 10th annual Carmel TomatoFest was a grand success," said Ibsen. "Considering that the event was held just following the Sept. 11 crisis, while our nation was still in shock, it's pretty amazing that we still had a "sell-out" attendance on Sept. 16, especially since a majority of our guests came from out of the area. Those who did attend felt that during this difficult time it was important to separate from the television and come together in an event that celebrated our lives within community.

"The success of our event was due to the loyal support from Quail Lodge Resort management and staff, participating restaurants, wineries, sponsors, our executive board and more than 300 community volunteers," Ibsen added.

Each year the Carmel TomatoFest attracts a large portion of its attendance from out-of-town visitors. Reservations breakdown by area for the 2001 event was: 62 percent from San Jose, San Francisco and Southern California; 27 percent local and 11 percent from western states, national and international.

Wide-reaching purpose

The purpose of the Carmel TomatoFest is to celebrate each years' tomato harvest in the setting of a "family" harvest festival, to share the taste experience of food excellence, wines and heirloom tomatoes from around the world, to enhance an appreciation for organic gardening and our legacy of seed-saving.

"Proceeds from the TomatoFest provide us the opportunity to benefit programs designed to enrich the lives of our children," Ibsen said. "Since it's inevitable that the youth of today will lead us tomorrow, we are delighted to contribute to the integrity of this leadership."

This year's event will be held 12:30 to 4:30 p.m. Sunday, Sept.15 at Quail Lodge Resort. Reservations by ticket purchase in advance are required. Tickets purchased before May 1 are $65. On May 1, 2002, tickets cost $75. (Children under 12 are admitted free.) Cost includes all foods, wines and activities.

Attendance at the Carmel TomatoFest is limited. Tickets have sold out one to two months prior to the event for the past several years.

For tickets and reservations go to the TomatoFest website, www.tomatofest.com, or call 647-3411, or (toll-free) (888) 989-8171.

PLANNING COMMISSION APPROVES CARL CHERRY CENTER REDO

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THE CARL Cherry Center for the Arts can undertake a small addition and remodel project without merging all five of its lots into one, the Carmel Planning Commission unanimously decided Jan. 9.

Carmel architect Mary Ann Schicketanz' plans include demolishing 126 square feet of the center and building a 149-square-foot addition with a relocated kitchen and two bathrooms. The proposal also calls for a new 690-square-foot patio to demarcate the Fourth Avenue entrance, a Carmel stone wall, reconfigured stone pathways and a landscape plan.

Because the center's use permit is 50 years old and the building lies in a residential area, it also needed a new permit to cover its quasi-public uses, including art exhibits, lectures, poetry readings, plays and rehearsals, assemblies, meditation sessions, acoustical musical events and rental housing.

Although the buildings are not considered historic, the site is — which allows those uses to continue in perpetuity, according to planner Elizabeth Caraker.

The planning commission first considered the application in November, but delayed a decision after Schicketanz and Carl Cherry board member Conrad Selvig objected to a city-imposed condition that all five lots owned by the center be permanently merged.

Compromise OK

Schicketanz said she agreed with a staff compromise to merge the three lots on which the bulk of the building sits while leaving two undeveloped parcels intact.

No other members of the public commented on the project, and commissioner Pope Coleman moved approval of the permits.

"It's one of our proudest institutions," he told Schicketanz. "That you feel comfortable to move ahead a little bit is good news for all of us."

the required forms with city clerk Karen Crouch and then gathered endorsement signatures from their supporters.

Many also stepped forward to offer financial contributions to the candidates.

Former Mayor Charlotte Townsend, defeated by Clint Eastwood, was the first to sign Livingston's nomination papers. "As a once-upon-a-time mayor, my heart is lifted more than it has been for a long, long time," Townsend said.

Livingston explained that it wasn't until last weekend that all three candidates decided to jump in the race.

"A small group of good friends got the three of us together in one room and we looked at each other and said, 'Are we going to do this?'" Livingston said.

White said it's been difficult to avoid questions about his political future ever since the 2000 election when he lost to McCloud by 36 votes.

"Jean and I couldn't go anywhere — to restaurants or the beach — without someone asking us, 'What are you going to do?'" White said.

Greeting his supporters at city hall was an emotional moment for White.

"I'm overwhelmed by this crowd," he said. "I thought there'd be a few people out there, but there are more people in this room than at city council meetings."

The former mayor said he wasn't interested in getting his old job back. "The difference now is I'm working [at Brinton's]. When I became mayor it was almost a full-time job."

Wright said it was "exhilarating to be involved in a campaign."

"I have been following council deliberations during the last year so I'm pretty familiar with what's going on," he said. "We didn't want to see an election without a challenge and a debate of the issues. That was foremost."

Wright added, "It was important that three of us participate in the campaign as opposed to one or two people. That's how we make a difference."

Filing period for the April 9 election closes Jan. 11.

Candidates' forum slated for March 26

THE CARMEL Pine Cone will host a forum for candidates for mayor and city council on Tuesday, March 26, at Carpenter Hall. The forum, moderated by publishers Paul Miller and Kirstie Wilde, will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Audience members will be able to ask questions, orally and in writing, of candidates in the April 9 Carmel election.

ALAIN PINEL REALTORS

Littlepage on a side-splitting backward roll

By DEBORAH SHARP

THEATER REVIEW

NOEL COWARD graces the stage again at the Carl Cherry Center for the Arts. His "Private Lives" closed 2001 there, and Layne Littlepage's "A Changing World, My Dear" opens the new year and promises to be a hit.

The opening night sold-out performance last Saturday is tribute to Littlepage's local reputation, and she didn't let us down. Littlepage created this revue of the songs of Coward and John Wallowitch, a New York composer, lyricist and classical pianist. In the opening Coward numbers there were a few rough edges: Barney Hulse's accompaniment overshadowed Littlepage's voice at times, her movements seemed a bit stiff, and there was some breathiness as she made the difficult transitions from spoken word to song and back again. But then came a show-stopper: Littlepage's recreation of a Beatrice Lillie sketch of a Japanese geisha, and any doubts about her stage presence vanished.

During the sketch there is a seeming accident when the geisha's elaborate wig falls off after Littlepage executes a side-splitting backward roll that reveals her very un-oriental knickers. When she discovers the wig is missing, she executes the same backward roll and retrieves the wig without missing a beat.

Littlepage's faultless impressions of Coward are further proof of her impressive talent. She handles the accent, the mannerisms and the spirit of Coward beautifully and in the process gives her audience insights into the public and private Coward. She gives a few biographical notes about the incredibly talented English playwright, lyricist, actor and fiction writer, including his early immersion in Gilbert and Sullivan, which allows her and accompanist Hulse to digress into a smattering of "The Mikado."

Hulse is more than just an accompanist to Littlepage. He adds his own understated urbanity to the performance, enhancing the Cowardesque atmosphere of wit and sophistication revealed in so many of the songs included in the revue. But Littlepage also gives occasional hints of the private Coward, a man who, despite his "talent to amuse," was apt to escape periodically on long journeys that took him away from the theater. One senses a

Meet hip jazzer Mark Murphy

A SIX-TIME Grammy nominee, Mark Murphy has been called one of greatest (and certainly the hippest) jazz vocalists performing today. Discovered by Sammy Davis, Jr. in 1953 at a jam session in Murphy's hometown of Syracuse, N.Y., Murphy has enjoyed a long and distinguished career with more than 40 recordings to his credit.

His first release, "Meet Mark Murphy," on the Decca label set the tone. Said legendary jazz producer Orin Keepnews about Murphy and his early recordings, "timeless . . . it's remarkable how fully developed as an artist Mark was so early on. He was born with his incredible rhythmic sense. And he's matured throughout the years, his vocal powers remained undiminished."

Named Downbeat Readers Best Male Jazz Singer four out of the last five years, Murphy remains on top of his trade. Murphy continues to tour internationally year 'round, appearing at festivals and concerts.

The Jazz & Blues Company is fortunate to have him return once again this Saturday, Jan. 12. Murphy will be accompanied by pianist Tom Garvin, bassists Seward McCain and drummer David Rokeach. Music starts at 7:30 p.m. Call 624-6431 for reservations.

With a new remodel recently completed, Cibo continues to provide fine jazz on a regular basis including the Lucid Jazz Quartet every Tuesday evening featuring local jazz guitar hero Joseph Lucido plus vocalist Jacqui Hope.

Jazz artists also perform regularly on Friday and Saturday nights. Appearing this weekend, Neal Banks & Friends play an easy-listening mix of jazz, soul and hip-hop. Originally from Detroit, Banks possesses a rich musical background that shines through as he captivates his audiences with unique renditions and style. Neal has been performing regularly at Monterey nightclubs for the past six years, appearing with entertainers Dennis Murphy, Ron E. Beck (Tower of Power) and Roger Eddy. For more information call Cibo at 649-8151.

At Bernardus Lodge in Carmel Valley, pianist Dick Whittington performs weekly from 7 to 10 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays with an all-star assortment of guest artists. "It's About Fairness"

PRESENTS A FREE SEMINAR

(About What Local Newspapers Are Too Scared To Cover...)

Civil Judicial Corruption in Monterey County

January 30th, 2002

The DoubleTree Hotel, Monterey, 6:30 - 9:00 PM

Want to know what some judges and attorneys are doing in your civil courts that local newspapers are too scared to tell you about?

-or

Do you want to "bust" that crooked Monterey attorney that ripped you off, or that judge you suspect played "footsie" with the other side against you?

Do you want to clear your mind, ease your pain, and share your story with others who have had similar horrific litigation experiences at the hands of the "Good Old Boy "civil judicial system of Monterey?

Either help toss the "Good Old Boys" into the street, or just listen.

Come listen and/or contribute information that will aide in tossing the "Good Old Boys" out on their ears and let these local attorneys and Judges know they are not going to be allowed to racketeer our courts against us any longer.

I'll show you examples of how attorneys string you out, sell you out, and are then protected by judges and other attorneys, so you can never get them to be held accountable for what they did.

When Al Capone did it, it was called racketeering.

One attorney after another has told me that they could not address the local Monterey corruption because they have to work in the legal community, their career and income would suffer. What a crock! It's because it is to their advantage and they profit from being part of the corruption (it's called legal fees). Simpler yet, it's just plain old fashioned racketeering. Attorneys are required to put your legal rights before their own self preservation. It is why they take an oath, and it is why they are licensed to go into court for us. However, they have gotten away with providing lame excuses to allow a wrong to be done to you, and to let their local brethren attorneys to get away with ripping you off at your expense. Why? Because then they can do it themselves and join in the profit and fun.

Who am I? The guy who is taking on the local "Good Old Boys."

I have already lined up some local judges and some local prominent attorneys behind an eightball (they just don't realize it yet, but I think they're getting the idea). I have spent over $200,000 in legal fees and another $500,000 of my own time forcing the "Good Old Boys" to orchestrate one cover up after another.

However, I want to have an "overwhelming" amount of evidence showing a continued pattern of biases and corruption in other cases, and with other people, so there is absolutely no "wiggle room" for them to escape with just a slap on the wrist.

I am not a criminal defendant but a civil litigant that had a "vendetta" launched against me because the "Good Old Boys" got scared when they found out they picked the wrong guy to try and bully.

What evidence do I have so far?
Some juicy tape recordings.....

court transcripts, incredible rulings....and a pattern of my own attorneys selling me out.

An example of what some attorneys have told me:

"The Judge was manipulating trial dates to punish you because you sued a local Monterey attorney."

"Members of the law firm are part of a 'Good Old Boys Club' here, and it could be an uphill battle with them."

"Someone from the law firm got to the judge to render an illegitimate ruling ."

If you come to the seminar, you can hear excerpts of some the conversations, see court transcripts and read the names of some of the "Good Old Boys" I'm going after.

The best way to deal with a bully is to strike back. (They never expect it.)

Don't be afraid of these bullies, most of them could not function in an environment where they were not given an upper hand over you. The best protection you have against reprisal is truth, strength in numbers and striking back.

Attend the upcoming seminar, share your story (or submit your information anonymously in a Black Box at the location) and compare notes with others.

Log on to AttorneyBusters.com to post complaints, find out more, and read our paid advertorials that Monterey County newspapers refuse to run.

RSVP by calling (831) 484-7516.

The first 50 respondents will receive a free AttorneyBusters.com t-shirt on arrival.

Radiant young Audrey stars in 'Roman Holiday'

AUDREY HEPBURN earned an Oscar as a princess in the 1953 classic, "Roman Holiday," to be screened 3 and 7 p.m. Sunday, Jan. 13 at the Golden Bough Theater, Monte Verde between Eighth and Ninth, Carmel. Tickets are $5.

World War II was start of photo career for Carmel's John Livingstone

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

CARMEL PHOTOGRAPHER John Livingstone, shown here in Paris as an army criminal investigation agent in 1945, has has been taking photographs for 50 years — a career which began while he was an air-ground combat intelligence observer in the Third Army. Livingstone accidentally took up photography while stationed in Czechoslovakia during the closing days of the war in Europe, when he came across a small box camera in a German soldier's abandoned pack. Knowing nothing of photography, he recorded what he saw during the last weeks of fighting, "breaking the most sacrosanct rules" of photography, by his own admission.

Post war service as an army criminal investigations agent in Paris in 1945 and '46, found Livingstone issued with a more sophisticated camera to record G.I. deserters looting supplies from army freight cars to sell on the black market. Off-duty, he roamed the streets, recording Parisians rebuilding their lives after years of enemy occupation.

Later, during the Cold War, he learned Polish at the Defense Language Institute and was as an intelligence officer in Central Europe. He used a 35 mm and 2-1/4 camera to amass a collection of negatives on which he captured decisive moments. His residency in Switzerland from 1967 to 1970 allowed for travel throughout Europe during which time his camera recorded dramatic scenes and events.

Livingstone's solo show of 150 photographs begins tonight, Friday, Jan. 11 at the Pacific Grove Art Center, 569 Lighthouse, with a reception to be held in his honor from 7 to 9 p.m. The show closes Feb. 11. For information, call 375-2208 man with a great deal of inner reserve in the final numbers of the first half of the show, "Sail Away" and "I'll Follow My Secret Heart."

The inner Sir Noel

This glimpse of the inner Coward is echoed in the second half of the show which concentrates on the lesser-known but equally intriguing talent of John Wallowitch. Evidently a New Yorker to the core, Wallowitch writes witty, teasing songs like "I'm 27," "I'm Axsing You" and "Bruce," which are clearly in the tradition of Coward, but he also reveals far more of the inner man in numbers about his own life and the lives of people close to him. In the first half of the show Littlepage dresses in a feminine version of Coward's characteristic top hat and tails attire, but in the second half, her dress of brilliant red is more appropriate to the franker emotions some of Wallowitch's songs portray.

In songs with lyrics like monologues, he describes his own home and his younger brother lost to suicide. "Tiny World" is a wonderful look into the much-loved space where Wallowitch writes his songs, and "Photographs" is an achingly poignant portrait of the younger brother who ultimately couldn't face life. The inclusion of this darker song is unnerving; its spirit is so contrary to the rest of the revue, but it does serve once again to highlight the range of Littlepage's talent. Her emotional range is as wide as her vocal range as she effortlessly runs the gamut from coy geisha to sophisticated playwright to haunted soul trying to understand his own life.

The simple sets of a piano with candelabra for the first half and an elegant chair and oriental rug for the second half are enough. Hulse and Littlepage create their own atmosphere through their music and stage presence. It's worth noting, too, that the refurbished performance and audience spaces at The Cherry are more than equal to the quality of the recent performances there. It's also good to see the seats bought nearly 40 years ago by patrons of Sunset Theater get second lives at The Cherry and The Indoor Forest Theater. So start your year with a, for the most part, lighthearted visit with Coward and Wallowitch at the intimate, comfortable "new" Cherry.

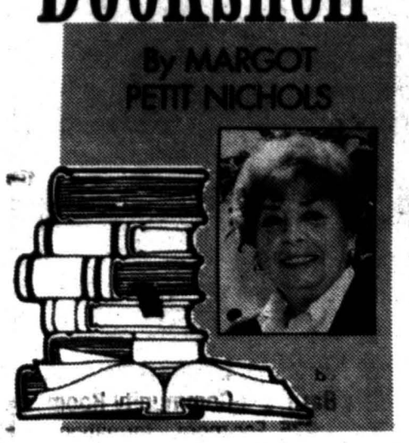
The Bookshelf

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS



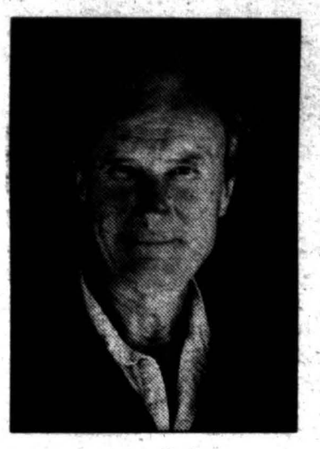
IF YOU'VE written a book and are still searching for a publisher, or if you feel you have a book in you but don't know how the pros actually sit down and turn out a product ready for publishing, here is the event you've been dreaming of:

The Carmel Public Library Foundation (CPLF) has planned another in their free "Author, Author" series, this one geared to go from 7 to 9 p.m. on Friday, Jan. 18 at Harrison Memorial Library, Ocean at Lincoln, Carmel-by-the-Sea.

Even if you're not a writer, but a reader, you'll still love this forum, planned by mystery writer and Harrison Memorial Library board member Bob Irvine. It will be moderated by CPLF board member Tom Parks for the first half of the evening, who will then invite questions to the authors from the audience. The event is billed as "So You Want to Write a Book."

This exploration of the writing process will feature three local published writers with books currently on local bookstore shelves (and at the library, of course), who will share "their experiences, their disappointments and their successes," according to the foundation's new executive director, Don Hansen.

Three authors who write in diverse genres and whose books have been reviewed in The Bookshelf will make up the panel: Historian Jim Holliday, Carmel-by-the-Sea author of the non-fiction "Rush for Riches: Gold Fever and the Making of California," published by the University of California Press and now about to go into its third printing;



Jim Holliday

Nancy Baker Jacobs, a suspense writer who lives in Pacific Grove with an even dozen books in print (her latest is "Double or Nothing" published by Five Star Press, an imprint of the Gale Group); and Pacific Grove professor and lighthouse docent Jerry McCaffery who wrote and self-published a non-fiction book, "Lighthouse — Pt. Pinos, Pacific Grove, California."

Holliday's Gold Rush book is unique in that it is a history of why California is a risk-taking culture: It all emanated from the gold rush mentality, Holliday posits. He tells the story of a Mexican hinterland in the 1840s which became modern California, the forerunner of entrepreneurial capitalism in the 1890s.

The book, published in late 1999 to commemorate the 150th anniversary of California's statehood, has been awarded a silver medal from the Commonwealth Club, was a History Book Club's main selection, and won an award from the Western Writers of America for non fiction.

Holliday, with a Ph.D. from UC Berkeley, was an associate professor of history at S.F. State University, executive director of the California Historical Society, director of Bancroft Library, UC Berkeley, and executive director of the Oakland Museum of California. His 1981 book, "The World Rushed In," has been in continuous publication for 20 years.

Coming from a totally different background (she has been a journalist, a private eye and a college professor, for instance), Nancy Baker Jacobs has published six suspense novels and six non-fiction books, some of which have been published in 10 foreign countries, as well. Her U.S. publishers include HarperCollins, Signet, Dell Books, Putnam, Viking Press, Penguin Press, Franklin Watts, Anchor Press-Doubleday, and Vanguard Press.

Nancy Baker Jacobs

"The Turquoise Tattoo" was voted one of the 10 best hardboiled mysteries by Japan's Maltese Falcon Society, and her non-fiction, "Relative Risk: Living with a Family History of Breast Cancer" was winner of the American Medical Writers Association's Rose Kishner Award for Writing Achievement in the Field of Breast Cancer.

Jerry McCaffery's Pt. Pinos book was produced by Sheridan Books out of Detroit, a short-run publisher McCaffery found on the internet. He discovered about 30 such publishers, but chose Sheridan because "it said the most interesting things" on its web site.

Sheridan has an on-line estimate form that "walks you through book size, number of pages, paper weight, cover design, and such," McCaffery said, which helped him through the early planning stages of the book and

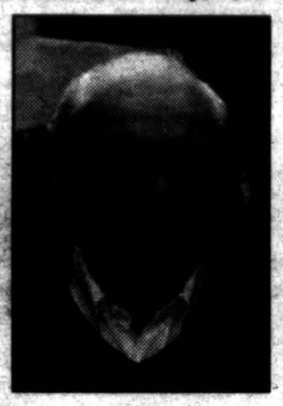
Sheridan accepts Word Perfect files electronically, and can handle digital photographs, which allowed the author to submit his manuscript ready for publication. "I learned how to do PageMaker," McCaffery said. "I controlled the layout."



Jerry McCaffery

A former editor of the Pacific Grove Museum of Natural History newsletter, McCaffery was familiar with computer applications and layout, and schooled himself in computer programs dealing with book publishing. McCaffery said he enjoyed the research on Pt. Pinos Lighthouse, and became intrigued with its early lighthouse keeper, Emily Fish, considering her a good subject for a possible novel some time in the future.

And as a professor of government (public budgeting) at Monterey's Naval Postgraduate School, he found that in the process of writing the book, his professional writing improved along the way.

Dana Gioia

A POET and critic who is also a successful, retired businessman who has made waves in the world of poetry by calling for a West Coast literary establishment, will be the featured speaker at a Robinson Jeffers Tor House Foundation discussion of American poetry. The event is set for 2 p.m., Saturday, Jan. 19 at the Pine Inn, Carmel-by-the-Sea. Admission is free.

Dana Gioia is the distinguished author of "Can Poetry Matter?: Essays on Poetry and American Culture," as well as three collections of poetry and numerous essays; he is a translator, and the editor of six anthologies of poetry. He has been the recipient of a number of honors and awards.

Gioia holds a B.A. and M.B.A. from Stanford, and an M.A. from Harvard in comparative literature. And while he has taught at Wesleyan University and Sarah Lawrence College and held the Ferrol A. Sams, Jr. Distinguished Chair of English as writer-in-residence at Mercer University, he was also vice president in charge of marketing with General Foods for 15 years.

When Gioia started to gain a reputation as a poet, he retired from the business scene nine years ago and left New York to return to his home state of California. Here he directed his literary interests toward writing and promoting poetry. Now 50, he has organized two national poetry conferences and founded the Santa Rosa Book Fair.

What he wants to do now is bring national attention to California poets, who, he feels, are getting short shrift on the national scene.

The discussion will be held in the Ocean Avenue Room at the Pine Inn, Ocean and Monte Verde. This event is the second in a series which mark a return of a Carmel tradition dating back to the 1920s for free public literary and cultural afternoons at the host Pine Inn. For information, call the Tor House Foundation office at 624-1813 or foundation president Alex Vardamis at 626-4441.

OPINION

Editorial

Bring back the porta-potties

WHEN NEWS of the torching of two portable toilets on Scenic Road spread through town just after Thanksgiving, one longtime Carmel resident commented, "I can think of plenty of suspects."

She was referring, of course, to some of the well-heeled residents of the street fronting Carmel Beach who have long complained about having portable toilets in their neighborhood. It seemed impossible that one of them would turn arsonist, even to get rid of what some regard as a public nuisance. And now that teenage vandals have confessed to burning down the porta-potties, rumors that an otherwise responsible adult was the culprit can be put to rest. Nevertheless, some Scenic Road residents have seized the opportunity provided by the vandals to renew their opposition to the toilets and have vowed to fight the city — one vowed to raise a "heckuva stink" — if it brings in new porta-potties and rebuilds the humble redwood structure that shielded them from view.

Their objections are a classic case of the NIMBYism for which Californians have become justly famous. Everybody wants electricity, but nobody wants power plants. Residents of this state have more cars, and drive more miles, than any other . . . but nobody wants an oil well or (God forbid!) an oil refinery within 1,000 miles. Public opinion polls show strong support for low-income housing, but proposals to actually build some are routinely thwarted by vehement public opposition. Etcetera, etcetera, etcetera. The phenomenon has become so widespread that several new acronyms have been invented to describe it. Our favorite, and one that perfectly describes the porta-potty opponents, is BANANA: Build Absolutely Nothing Anywhere Near Anybody.

The Scenic Road porta-potties were so inconspicuous — tucked in a group of cypress — that many people who frequently walked by them weren't even aware the toilets were there. They were "near" homes only in the sense that "across the street, on the other side of a footpath and a short distance out on a small point of land above the beach" is "near." Perhaps more relevant is the fact that they filled an absolutely essential public need — one that is shared by those who oppose the porta-potties.

The fact that nearby residents have their own, private toilets adjacent to the beach is a privilege they deserve because they paid for it. But that doesn't change the fact that the tens of thousands of people who visit Carmel Beach — including many Carmel residents — sometimes need to pee. The restrooms at Del Mar are just too far away, especially for children and senior citizens.

The city council should set to work immediately to rebuild the lost porta-potties. If they don't want to, they should put the issue to the voters. It is obvious what the majority would say.

Thoughts while waiting for Afghanistan

Dear Editor:

I was to leave for Kabul today (Jan. 1), but I have just learned my trip into Afghanistan is to be postponed for a few days. As we awaited permission from the Department of Defense to travel in Kabul, we were told the airstrip wasn't secure and we were to be diverted to the Bagram military airport just north of Kabul. The immediate disappointment of postponement was quickly assuaged as I realized the extra time would be a godsend in my preparations to leave. Now I had time to fly to Washington, D.C., to meet with government officials whose support could greatly pave the way for the difficult times that surely lay ahead in Afghanistan. I also needed to meet with Afghans who had recently returned from Afghanistan. Their contacts would prove to be vital in this war-ravaged country where ephemeral alliances could change overnight.

The most important person I was to meet in Washington was Ms. Suraya Sadeed, the founder of Help the Afghan Children, Inc. She is completely dedicated to the rebuilding of her country. Her dream for Afghanistan is to shelter, protect, and educate the children of Afghanistan. This is precisely my dream and prayer for Afghanistan as well. Her 20 years of residency in the United States made her savvy and streetwise with a heart filled with compassion for all children. She said she would be honored if I would join her board of directors.

We excitedly outlined short-term projects and long-term goals. My rusty Farsi endeavored to keep the pace of our frenzied excitement. Her words that stayed with me most was "You can heal the child from the war, but if you heal the child's spirit you can prevent the next war." Unlike my organization, Ms. Sadeed's funds come mostly from the Afghan community whereas the funding for PARSA (Physiotherapy and Rehabilitation Services for Afghanistan) come from the generosity of all Americans. We both real-

Carmel Public Library Foundation benefactor Ed Jordan dies

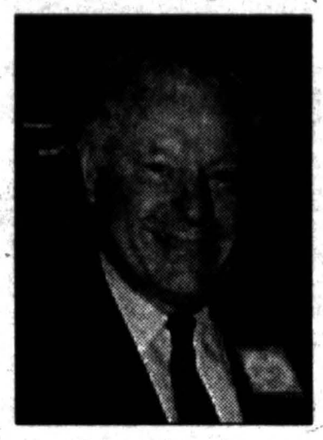
PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

EDWARD G. JORDAN, noted nationally as the first chairman and chief executive of Conrail, and the man who helped lift several railroad freight lines out of bankruptcy, died of cancer Dec. 26 at his vacation home in Oregon. He was 72.

In Carmel, this Oakland native is remembered as a devoted member of the board of the Carmel Public Library Foundation, the fundraising arm of Harrison Memorial Library, serving as president from 1992 to 1995. Mr. Jordan was founder and benefactor of the Sterling Circle, a donor recognition program for planned gifts of $10,000 or more.

In 1993, Mr. Jordan created the foundation's Sterling Circle giving program, promising to donate $500,000 following the deaths of himself and Mrs. Jordan.

"Ed was responsible for a meaningful part of the early progress the foundation made," recalled friend Sam Wright, who met Mr. Jordan while both attended the Stanford University Graduate School of Business. Wright served as treasurer of the Carmel Public Library Foundation when Mr. Jordan was president.



Edward Jordan

"It was inspirational working with him," Wright added. "He was a marvelous administrator, a very dedicated person, and obviously, Ed had a very significant business and managerial background."

MILESTONES

Mr. Jordan designed and established the investment and endowment pay-out policies that are still in use today by the Carmel Public Library Foundation. He was also a member of the Carmel Planning Commission.

"He was a wonderful person," said Margaret Pelikan, director of the library. "He was retired but very, very energetic. Mr. Jordan gave us the idea to offer people recognition in their lifetimes for gifts we don't receive until they're deceased. To be able to personally thank people for remembering the library is a gift in itself."

Mr. Jordan graduated from UC Berkeley in 1951. He worked for several corporations, including the Ford Motor Company and Procter & Gamble.

President Gerald Ford selected him in 1974 to be president of the United States Railway Association, a federal agency formed to take over most properties owned by ailing rail freight carriers in the Northeast and Midwest.

By mid-1975 its board chose Mr. Jordan to lead a new line, the Consolidated Rail Corporation, or Conrail. With no previous railroad experience and fighting an uphill battle in the freight business, Mr. Jordan recorded two consecutive profitable quarters for Conrail in 1980. He then resigned to serve as dean of the business school at Cornell University. He also served on the boards of several corporations and served as president of the American College in Bryn Mawr, Penn.

ized how much we could help one another. We were working for one common goal. I was reminded of my Cherokee grandmother's saying, "Mitakuya Oyasin," which means "we are all related". I have a greater understanding of her wisdom today.

I had a few hours before my next flight so I went to the mosque near the Washington Monument. The muezzin's call to evening prayer transported me in the same powerful way it did the first time I heard it almost 40 years ago. When I walked out of the mosque, the full moon sat surreally atop the obelisk of the Washington Monument. From the minaret I could still hear "Allah u Akbar." I didn't know if I was in America or Afghanistan; it didn't matter. All I knew was God is truly great.

Mother's side of incident

Dear Editor:

I am outraged by the position taken by the Diocese of Monterey in supporting the new principal of Junipero Serra School who pulled the hair of two students at the school on two different occasions. I happen to know these kids. One of them is my son.

My son was on the playground working on a homework assignment when Dr. Virginia Higgins (the principal) told him that she wanted to talk to him in the office. When he bent down to pick up his lunchbox, she reached down and grabbed him by the hair, yanked him up, and started walking toward the office before she let go. Not only was this inappropriate behavior by the woman, I believe that, at a public school, it would be considered illegal!

For my adolescent son, the pain was not just physical. He found it humiliating to have this happen on the playground in front of his peers. No child should be treated that way. And I find it very ironic that this same woman distributed a letter to all the parents, in the beginning of the school year, saying that "hurtful words, gestures, or physical attack are unacceptable ways to deal with conflict and disagreement at school." Does this only apply to the children?

I have been a parent at Junipero Serra School for 15 years. This is my fourth child to come through this school, which includes grades K-8. I have seen teachers and principals come and go. I, unlike many other parents, have not left the school just because I didn't like next year's teacher. I have paid tuition for my children to attend a Catholic school because I not only wanted a good education for them, I also wanted them in a Christian environment where they would get spiritual guidance. The behavior of Dr. Higgins goes against the teachings of Jesus Christ. For the Diocese of Monterey to condone such heinous behavior and invite this woman to stay on as principal is appalling. Jesus opposed the hypocrisy of the Pharisees, just as I oppose the hypocrisy of any supporters of this newly hired principal.

Sandy Claws

STORY AND PHOTO/MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

BAILEY MARTIN, 7 months, is a black lab in love with the world. Especially the world at Carmel Beach.

This gregarious black Lab makes instant friends and steals optic yellow tennis balls without a qualm. While we patiently waited for Bailey to resume an interrupted beach interview Thursday around noontime, he darted back and forth, greeting new arrivals and playing tag with others.

As fair-weather friends wandered off, he came back, all eager to tell us about his big sister Lucy, 7, a border collie and lab mix with whom he shares sleeping quarters in the carport at home. Granddad Larry, his transport to the beach, said that Bailey's role in life is to keep Lucy on her toes.

We squinted against bright January sunlight reflecting off the beach, and watched as Bailey stole a tennis ball from a damp and disheveled Dalmatian. When Bailey dropped it in the sand, it was stolen anew by Chai Van Buskirk, a two-year-old immensely fluffy Chow whose penchant for tennis balls was recorded in a Sandy Claws column last February. Easy come, easy go.

Dawn, Bailey's Mom, is a freshman at Carmel High who is now short one bicycle seat because of Bailey's voracious puppy appetite. Bailey also shares his Carmel Valley residence with Grandmother Danielle and Aunt Burl, a sophomore at U.C., Santa Barbara, and three feline sisters, Mittens, Kitten and Toby. These latter three, Bailey firmly believes, were put on earth for his chasing pleasure, and although the trio outsmarts him every time by flying to the top of the fence, still, Bailey is always game to try again next time he gets them all together.

It's no exaggeration to say that Bailey leads a full and happy life.

"Carmel Legends"

"Boy, I Could've Bought That Property For Almost Nothin' Back In The Day!" Here is a twist on the old "I could have bought that property for (fill in some ridiculously low amount) "X" years ago" story.

Dick Collins (for whom Collins Polo Field is named) was hired by the lot's owner to list the property for $180,000 and, as Dick was wandering around the site, it occurred to him that he used to own this very property!

As Dick related to the story to Rita Lewis, his broker at Del Monte Realty (now known as Coldwell Banker Del Monte Realty), Samuel F. B. Morse himself had given the lot to Dick as a reward for good services to Del Monte Properties Company (now Pebble Beach Company) back in the 1940s. Dick accepted this generous gift located in what was then considered as the boondocks.

Then, as now, each property owner in the Del Monte Forest paid an annual road maintenance fee to the Company. After paying his $25.00 road fee for a few years, Dick felt he was throwing good money after bad, and decided he was smarter giving the lot back and keeping the $25.00 annual payment. So he gave the property back to the Company!

Luckily Dick did much better on his other business decisions but this time he had to laugh at himself for passing up a possible $179,000 dollars in profit. After all if he had paid $25 per year for forty years it would have cost him $1,000 and if the property sold for $180,000 he would have grossed $179,000! Worse yet, he was the agent who hired to sell the object of his folly!

Note: Still today, with Pebble Beach property selling in the multi-millions, the Pebble Beach road maintenance fee in the estate area remains $25.00!

CITY MAKES WAY FOR WIRELESS COMMUNICATIONS

By MARY BROWNFIELD

SPRINT PCS CAN install three antennas in a "stealth flag pole" on city property near the Carmel Police Department, and Metro PCS can place four antennas on three chimneys atop Junipero Street's Bay View Inn, the Carmel Planning Commission decided unanimously on two separate applications Jan. 9.

The pole will still fly flags; the antennas are not noticeable.

But the communications companies must be sure their systems don't interfere with the operation of commercial or residential electronics and pay for radio frequency field tests to make sure.

"There's no question this should be tested," said new planning commissioner Alan Hewer, who holds an advanced degree in mathematics from Cambridge University and headed development efforts for a technology company before retiring in 2000.

The city's code requires testing for impacts on larger installations, he said, "but my concern is on the residential side — home phones, wireless and PCs. I think there should be some attention to testing the impact of such antennas on the surrounding residential areas.

"The big difference in my mind is the typical user cannot detect what's causing problems," he said later in the hearing.

The companies must also ensure emergency communications services are available to the city in the event of a disaster and offer their services should the city's emergency communications systems stop working.

And if the building official, the fire marshal or a county environmental health officer find the equipment poses a significant and immediate threat to public health or safety, the companies would have to stop using it immediately.

The planning commission unanimously approved the two applications, requiring the same conditions on both.

Other business during the Jan. 9 meeting included a proposed two-story addition to the Tally Ho Inn on Monte Verde. That application was pulled by the applicant before it could be heard, chairman Frank Wasko announced at the start of the meeting.

degree in finance and her juris doctorate from Santa Clara University, and is currently active on the boards of Salinas Valley Memorial Hospital, the Children's Miracle Network and Monterey College of Law.

Brand new board

The five members of the new Carmel Design Review Board — which will consider its first applications Feb. 23 and will meet the fourth Wednesday of each month — were sworn in at a special meeting in city council chambers Jan. 7.

The DRB will handle all design applications that are too complex to be approved administratively but don't include use permits, variances or subdivisions, according to principal planner Brian Roseth. Those are saved for the planning commission.

"So the design review board gets everything else," he explained. "That will include storefront façade remodels significant enough to not be approved by staff, a wide variety of residential design projects including new houses and substantial remodels — things like that."

Strid and Bartron have brought their experience with the ins and outs of Carmel's complex design ordinances and guidelines to the board, where they are joined by three Carmelites new to city government.

Interior designer Scott Manha, a Casanova resident, said he wanted to join the DRB to "give back to the community that has been good to me."

"I believe I have not only a love of Carmel but a level of good taste and fairness that I could bring to the table when making decisions," he wrote in a letter to the city. A Carmel resident for 25 years, Manha has also volunteered with the Monterey County AIDS Project and the Carmel Bach Festival.

Land use and environmental planning consultant Nancy Isakson said she is "interested in maintaining character and quality of life" in Carmel while "balancing the needs for upgrading and revitalizing existing structures."

Prior to starting her own consulting business in 1991, the Santa Rita St. resident worked in the construction industry for 13 years. She currently serves on the conservation committee for the Pajaro Valley Water Management District and the cost allocation committee for Monterey City Water Resources.

Monterey Street resident Michael LePage — who has owned and run his own general contracting business for 23 years — said he wants to "contribute to the civic process" and offer his experience to the city.

The new commissioners and board members were appointed by the Carmel City Council, acting planning director Chip Rerig said.

"We've had great commissions as of late — very polite and respectful to the community," he said. "They've been a pleasure to work with."

EURICH ON REAL ESTATE

No two houses are exactly the same, but sometimes they can come pretty close. Imagine two similar homes that are sidy by side, and each has a "For Sale" sign on the lawn. And suppose both the homes are priced the same. Which one will sell first?

What do buyers look for in a home?

Walter Eurich

No contest — buyers will pick the house that looks best.

Everybody knows it's smart to fix up a home before putting it on the market. The first few minutes that buyers see a house are very important to their buying decision. During that brief time, if they perceive the house to be the kind of place they will be happy in — if it promises the kind of life they want to live, and if the price is competitive, a contract may soon come the seller's way.

But remember that although people often use their hearts to choose the homes they buy, they still use their heads. If two similar houses have different prices, the lower-cost home might be the winner. And you should keep in mind, that buyers generally see several homes before they buy, so your home is competing with all the other for-sale homes in the community in your price range, and not just the homes down the street.

A good real estate agent will help you set the price on your home so it is competitive, and help you make your home appealing to buyers.

Tierra Grande homes get thumbs down from C.V. committee

By MARY BROWNFIELD

PLANS FOR homes, a caretaker's unit and the removal of oak trees on a 30-acre parcel at the end of Via Cazador garnered negative comments from several nearby Tierra Grande residents about the number of homes (two), the doomed trees (38), and erosion during a Carmel Valley Land Use Advisory Committee meeting Jan. 7.

Tierra Grande is across Carmel Valley Road from the Mid-Valley Shopping Center.

"There were probably about 15 or 16 Tierra Grande residents who came out in opposition to it," said CVLUAC member Glenn Robinson, who voted with three of the six other committee members to recommend a denial from the planning commission.

The proposal to build more than one home on the parcel gave the committee "a great feeling that this was an end-run around the subdivision prohibition," Robinson said.

But Monterey County's code allows property owners to build more than one home on a single parcel without subdividing it, according to project designer John Mandurrago, who represented applicants John and Martha Kenny and Barbara McFarland at the meeting.

"The real thing they had a problem with was having two houses on a 30-acre parcel — they thought it should only have one house," Mandurrago said. "The county says you can have two houses and can ask for two houses, but it's a discretionary permit."

Neighbors and the land use advisory committee also had questions about erosion caused by the road, the ability of the culvert at Carmel Valley Road to handle additional runoff and proper staking of the project. Some also expressed concern that the development could encourage building in nearby Buckeye Canyon.

Most of those issues can be easily addressed, Mandurrago said, but the Buckeye Canyon argument might not be "a fair way to try to stop a couple of houses on this side of the canyon." He added that removing 38 trees may sound like a lot, but the 30-acre parcel is "covered with trees."

A motion was made to delay the vote to give Mandurrago and Kenny — absent from the meeting because of his father's death Jan. 6 — more time to address concerns, but it did not pass. The CVLUAC then voted 4-3 to recommend denial.

Robinson said he felt the vote will make county planners aware of the community's concerns.

"There was very strong neighborhood opposition to this project going forward, and that's one thing that's nice about the LUAC process," Robinson said. "This is where the neighbors can come in and have input without taking the day off and driving to Salinas."

Commission: Shellooes' branch can go

By MARY BROWNFIELD

SAN ANTONIO property owners William and Mary Lou Shellooe's four-year war to build a home on Scenic Road centered on a battle over a dying Cypress spar last week. That fight they won: the Carmel Forest and Beach Commission ruled unanimously Jan. 3 that the couple can remove the large branch and continue in the permit process to build a new house around their Sea Urchin and Periwinkle cottages — as long as they ensure their new driveway doesn't endanger a city-owned cypress on the street.

It was a small victory for the Shellooes. Their next task will be to seek approval from the planning commission in February.

The forest and beach commission's consideration of the permit was delayed last month after an attorney representing neighbors Kay and Pres Minnick claimed removing the 20-inch branch violated state, city and coastal commission regulations. They also objected to the tree permit being considered before the Shelloes' building plans had been finalized.

But city attorney Don Freeman advised the forest and beach commission that it could proceed with the tree permit, according to city forester Mike Branson, so commissioners considered it Jan. 3.

"Don Freeman recommended we go ahead and address this application like any other before this board and that issues regarding design and the California Coastal Commission would be resolved," Branson said. "Those aren't exactly within the purview of the forest and beach commission."

If excavation is required for a new driveway on the San Antonio side of the property, commissioners decided to require hand trenching to ensure the roots of a large cypress tree nearby are not damaged.

If staff determines the driveway would hurt the tree, the application will return to the forest and beach commission for further review.

Although the planning commission was set to review the Shellooes' plans Jan. 9, that hearing was delayed because of the Minnicks' concerns, according to acting planning director Chip Rerig. The Carmel Planning Commission is scheduled to discuss the Shellooes' revised plans Feb. 13.

Coldwell Banker to hire 500

IN AN economy where layoffs are the norm, Coldwell Banker is looking for some hires. The real estate recruitment giver for 500 real estate agents.

"The real estate market has been pretty strong lately and in order to meet the needs of our clients, we need to recruit talented, highly skilled professionals to join our team," said Arnon Goldman, president and CEO of the company.

Goldman knows there are a lot of people disillusioned by the dot.com world who are looking for a career change, but may be afraid to take the plunge.

"Our goal is to educate job seekers that a career in real estate is highly entrepreneurial and can be an excellent career path," he said, adding that at least 40 people per month will be enrolled in a "fast, revolutionary and comprehensive training program that will license an agent within three months."
